Interview with a Lunchbox

I Love English World:
Umm... why am I
interviewing a lunchbox?
Because I am one of the most extraordinary things about India! I have even* been studied* by Harvard Business School! In the city of Mumbai (Bombay) there are about 5,000 people who work as dabbawalas, which translates to English as "one who carries" a lunchbox. Their job is to deliver* us to almost 200,000 office* workers daily*.

VOCABULAIRE F.T.T
although: bien que
around: environ
carry a lunchbox: porter un panier repas, une gamelle

I LEW: Oh, so it's like Uber Eats or Deliveroo?
A little - but much better.
The dabbawalas collect* us on bicycle directly from workers* homes, where lunch has been cooked by a member of the family.
They then put us on trains into* the city where other dabbawalas deliver us (still warm*) to workers at their desks*. Later* in the day, the operation reverses* to return us home.

collect: venir chercher daily: chaque jour
delivers: livrer
delivery: livraison
desk (at their): bureau à leur poste de travail

I LEW: That's great, but apps are the same thing really, aren't they?
No! Firstly, food delivery* apps are a new invention.
The dabbawala system started in 1890 and is still growing* by 5-10% a year, despite* the arrival of apps and restaurant chains in India. Secondly, it only costs around* fifteen euros a month to eat tasty* home-cooked* meals instead* of unhealthy* fast food!

despite: malgré
efficiency: efficacité
even: même
grow: croître

I LEW: Hmm. Okay,
I suppose that is better...
Plus, although* dabbawalas are generally illiterate* and don't use GPS, only one in six million deliveries goes wrong*! Dabbawalas are extremely proud* of their efficiency* and their motto* is "error is horror"! The entire operation uses a unique code system that only they can understand.
Someone told me that FedEx is really jealous...

reverse: s'inverser
study: étudier
tasty: savoureux
unhealthy: pas bon pour la santé warm (still): encore chaud worker's home: foyer, domicile de l'employé wrong (go): se passer mal
